Washington Census Tract SNAP Benefit Use

Washington County SNAP Benefit Use

This map shows the percentage of households using SNAP benefits per Washington state county. The natural breaks classification scheme breaks the classes up into equal, clear segments. I chose to use my normalized data column that calculated the SNAP benefit use by household, because I think that's the easiest data set from which to examine benefit distribution through the state. The legend shows that household benefit use is pretty limited throughout the state, with the highest percentage being only 23%. State legislature can use the map to see which counties are accessing the least amount of benefits and figure out what has factored into that as well as who needs more funding.
